HAD TO BE ON TIME.

Dinner Giver Would Allow His Guests No Latitude.

Closely parallel to the fag end of the Euston road, and visible from it at various turnings is a street which belongs to few men's London. It is a dingy, granite paved, populous street of no attraction, the sort of street in which you might expect to see on a fine day a dancing bear.

Yet this street has known better times and eager guests. In the house he knew as No. 43, now obliterated by a big new warehouse, Dr. William Kitchener entertained his fellow wits and gourmets. He had ample means to ride his three hobbies-optics, cookery and music. His dinners were often elaborate experiments in cookery, and

THE RICKSHAW AND DANDY.

Primitive Modes of Travel in Hill Country of India.

In the mountain districts of India the principal vehicles of passenger conveyance are the 'rickshaw and the 'dandy," with which Rudyard Kipling has made us familiar. United States Consul Gen. Michael, of Calentia, writes thus about these vinicles: "The rickshaw is pushed and pulled through the streets and on the roads in the woman's Home Companion as leading out into the country by four coolies, and the 'dandy' is carried on clares there is no such thing as a the shoulders of four and sometimes "Circuses are perhaps more to used to some extent but most of the give a springy motion when the coolies are walking and trotting. A crosspiece rests on the shoulders of the coolies and is shifted now and then from one shoulder to the other for rest. By the command of the coolle in charge this shift is made simultaneously. As a rule, both the 'rickshaws and the 'dandies' are heavier than snow white, with big markings in they need to be, and they are generaltheir spots of the tip of eagle feath ily lacking in finish. Yet these vehicles cost as much as light and strong ones well finished should cost. The writer would like to place alongside of the 'rickshaws and 'dandies' in use in India some samples manufactured in the United States after designs made by an American designer. The sam-

HORSE THAT COULD REASON. Fhysician Tells of Animal's Conduct | on a Stormy Night.

The best story told in an evening of amusing talk at, the Winship club meeting this week was that of Dr. Paul about his partner in business for score of years or more, his horse, When the doctor and he were 20 years younger in practice Dr. Paul received "hurry" night call from one of the best families in his circle. They lived a mile or more away in a rural neighborhood and although it was late at night and storming the doctor rushed out there at full speed.

On arriving in the yard at the house he threw the blanket hastily upon or, rather, at the horse (who never required hitching), for it was found afterward lying on the ground at his side, and dashed into the house with his case of instruments. It turned out that the aged grandmother of the family had had a fall, that her should er was dislocated, that ether had to be administered the pain was so greatin short, the doctor could not take his hand off his work for three hours All this time a driving sleet storm, the moisture freezing as it fell and giving everything a coat of ice, was beating upon his partner out in the vard.

When the doctor finally emerged in the small hours t was to find the horse where he had left him, except that the rig was headed round for home. A daylight examination revealed the truth through the marks of the hoofs and wheels of the buggy that during his long wait of three hours in a pelting and freezing storm, the horse had a score of times made up his mind to go home and had gone down the road sometimes a quarter, sometimes half of the way, and then had thought this hard on the doctor and had turned back to wait as in duty bound.

If this is not a demonstration not only of reasoning power but also of moral consciousness, what is it? It tablishment, according to the Roches- is needless to say that the doctor respects his subhuman partner and ter," he said, "an' those hams, and would no more think of parting with that lot o' sugar, and—" The shop- him till death doth them part than keeper rubbed her hands together with he would with any member of his fam-By.
